The Kunekune is a cute and friendly little pig from New Zealand, smaller than other pigs and with one other big difference -- they're grass eaters. A Kunekune is quite happy eating grass alone: you can use them as a lawnmower, and unlike other pigs, they won't harm trees or shrubs. If you don't have grass or an orchard to graze them in, household scraps will do.

When Alfred T. Andreas chose Minnesota as the subject for his new atlas, the state was only fifteen years old. Andreas's publication of An Illustrated Historical Atlas of the State of Minnesota changed the way state atlases were written, illustrated, and distributed. The atlas also put the social and cultural landscape of early Minnesota literally on the map.

One of the most widespread and abundant songbirds in the world today, the House Sparrow has a simple success formula: it associates with humans. Native to Eurasia and northern Africa, it has succeeded in urban and farming areas all over the world -- including North America, where it was first released at New York in 1851. Tough, adaptable, aggressive, it survives on city sidewalks where few ...

It is believed that all domestic chickens descend from the Red Jungle Fowl (Gallus gallus), which was first domesticated at least five thousand years ago in Asia. However, today's meat chicken looks quite different from its wild ancestor - and quite different from modern laying chickens, which are bred specifically for egg production.
